Seneca College brings distance learning to Concordia

Is the college campus obsolete and about to be replaced by the television set in your living room? This could very well be the implication of the successful record of Seneca TeleCollege, a distance learning program conducted via cable television.

Demonstrating this program at Concordia on June 1 will be Toni Silberman, the director of the Seneca learning program and part-time learning.

Seneca College, located in Willowdale, a suburb of Toronto, is broadcasting ten courses through the medium of five cable television channels. These programs are repeated at designated times during the week to accommodate each learner's schedule. Detailed study guides accompany each course and provide lesson overviews and objectives, terminology, detailed outlines of the TeleCollege programs, study exercises, support materials and self-tests.

If the student needs help, there is a telephone hotline linked to the Seneca Learning Centre to provide instant clarification and pertinent course information.

To prevent possible future technological shock, the program also includes an orientation session as well as on-campus seminars and discussion groups so that students can meet their instructors in the flesh and also exchange information with other students.

The open lecture/demonstration will be held on June 1 at 2:30 p.m. in room 435 of the Hall Building.

Bernard Rokas R.I.P.

On Tuesday, May 29, Mr. Bernard Rokas, the assistant manager of Printing Services passed away.

Bernie joined the University in 1973 after 40 years in the printing industry. Over the past six years he developed a high level of professionalism and craftsmanship within the Department.

Bernie's sincerity and dedication will be greatly missed by the staff of Printing Services as well as by the many persons in the community with whom he dealt.

Visitation is at Clarke, MacGillivray, White Funeral Home, 5644 Bannatyne, Verdun today (May 31) from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. and from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m.

The funeral will take place Friday, June 1 at 10 a.m. from Lady Gate of Dawn Church (Lutheran), behind the Jolicoeur métro station, corner Deseau and Jolicoeur.

Gallium arsenide changes face of electronics One man's poison is another man's profit

By Mark Gerson

Take a common by-product of aluminum production, mix it with a little everyday poison and what have you got?

If your by-product happens to be gallium, your poison arsenic, and if you "mix" them in a special three-stage furnace buried in the subterranean depths of the Hall Building's electrical engineering labs, you'll probably end up with a compound that is in the process of revolutionizing solid-state (electronic) technology.

That compound is gallium arsenide, and the only place in Canada where it is produced is right here at Concordia.

"There are no more than a half-dozen producers in the United States, including Texas Instruments," says electrical engineering professor B.A. Lombos, a man who has been involved with gallium arsenide for more than 25 years. "There are another one or two in the U.K., only one in continental Europe and we just don't know about the Soviet Union."

When you consider that of these ten or so producers, some, such as Concordia, are non-commercial, the shortage of gallium arsenide and its resulting high price—$3,000 per kilogram crystal on the international market—are understandable.

The high price of the compound is not because gallium and arsenic are in short supply. According to Lombos, arsenic is easily obtainable and Cominco, a major Canadian producer of aluminum, "will sell all the gallium it can."

The problem is that gallium arsenide, like Panasonic, is "slightly ahead of its time."

Whereas the advantages of gallium arsenide as a direct semi-conductor (something that transfers electricity to light and vice versa) in integrated circuits, laser satellite communications, solar energy converters and light-emitting diodes (LED) have been recognized for a number of years, the production technology is only now being perfected.

In fact, Lombos' unique process for gallium arsenide crystal "growth" was patented last year, and the university will soon have to face the question of whether or not it wants to get into commercial production of this high-demand compound.

One of the reasons for this high demand is that the tiny (one-eighth of an inch square, almost paper-thin) integrated circuits used in most of the new LED watches are gallium arsenide-based. And the makers of the popular watches are anxious to get their hands on as much of the compound as possible.

Lombos tells a story of a California outfit that called him and asked to buy as much gallium arsenide as Concordia could sell.

"Would you like a ton?" he asked them jokingly, not expecting the serious affirmative response he received.

What makes gallium arsenide superior to other direct semi-conductors such as silicon and germanium is its expected lifetime—"practically forever," says Lombos—and its resistance to high-energy radiation and extreme temperatures.

Silicon becomes virtually useless when heated above 120°C or cooled below -253°C, but gallium arsenide's ability to withstand heat of 400° to 500°C and cold of -268°C makes it indispensable for space use.

"If components inside a satellite are facing the sun one day and away from it the next," explains Lombos, "they have to be able to withstand extreme heat and cold."

One of the projects Lombos is working on now (under contract to the Quebec government) is the development of a laser communication system based on the CO₂ laser.

He is replacing the rock salt window of the laser with one made from gallium arsenide and is also using the compound in the modulator, which varies or modulates the laser beam transmitted, and in the detector, which picks up the beam's signal at the receiving end.

"One burst of a laser with a millisecond duration could transmit the complete memory of our computer," says Lombos to illustrate the implications of a communication system based on laser.

Another application of gallium arsenide in which Lombos is involved is solar energy converters.

"Gallium arsenide-based solar energy converters are calculated to be 20 per cent effective. That's not an estimate, it's a calculation," he emphasizes, "and it beats out nature, which is the next best power converter. Chlorophyll is only ten per cent effective."

Right now it takes 24 hours to grow a one kilogram crystal of gallium arsenide in the electrical engineering lab using Lombos' process. That crystal is then cut up into 200 "slices" and again into approximately 40,000 "chips", each of which is a useable integrated circuit.

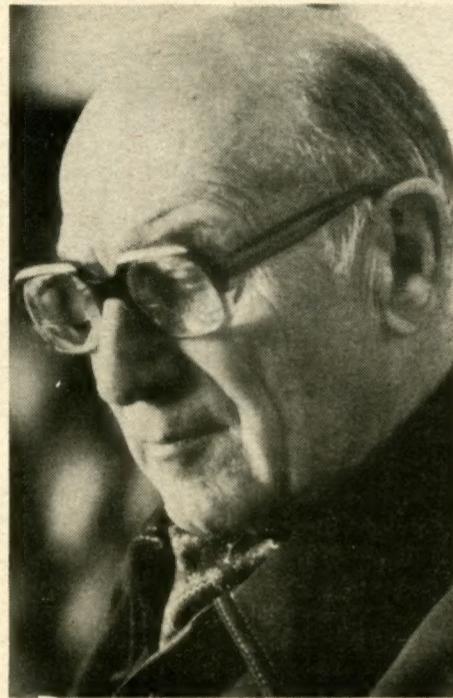

"Although the cost to us in materials is $1,000, once it gets into mass production, the price will drop," says Lombos adding that a characteristic of solid state technology is that the development costs are high, but once something gets into commercial production, the costs, and therefore the price, plummet.

"I would like to think that Canada has an edge in the field. But it's always difficult getting Canadian industry interested in picking up anything that hasn't come out of the United States."

"I would also like to think that Concordia has an edge in the field. But will we use it? I don't know."

Seven to receive honorary degrees

Emmanuel Bach, 73 years old, is Concordia's oldest graduate this year among the 2,256 students to be awarded degrees at four convocations June 3 to June 10.

A native of Wilno, Poland, Bach did not begin university studies until 1973, when he enrolled in an undergraduate program in Judaic Studies at Concordia, after retiring from the teaching profession. He was one of five "mature" students benefitting from a senior scholarship awarded to students 60 years and older on the basis of academic potential and/or "life experience".

Bach will receive his long-coveted degree at the Arts and Science convocation at Loyola, 2 p.m. June 10. At the same convocation, three Canadians who have achieved distinction in their respective fields, will be awarded honorary doctorates. They are Robert Bell, outgoing principal of McGill University, Rutherford Professor of Physics and president of the Royal Society of Canada; William Cantwell Smith, distinguished comparative

Senate approves 1980-81 programs

By Mark Gerson

A long-awaited major in journalism was one of the many program changes approved by Senate at its last regular meeting of the 1978-79 session on Friday.

The proposal, that was subject to the most discussion, and the only one to be defeated, was for a BA Specialization in Science and Journalism.

Put forward by the newly created Science College with the support of the Journalism Department, the specialization would have combined 30 credits in journalism with 36 credits and membership in the Science

College. According to Arts and Science assistant dean Tom Adley, the program would "train journalists who will have a knowledge of current scientific issues."

One of the major stumbling blocks to the program's passage was the opposition of the University Curriculum Coordinating Committee (UCCC). Speaking for the committee at Senate, Engineering assistant dean Charles Giguere said that the program "doesn't meet the requirements of what we consider a bacc. spécialisé (specialization)."

vous", who will be called on to give a short speech during the convocation ceremonies.

Two outstanding contributors to the arts in Canada will be honoured at the Faculty of Fine Arts convocation which takes place June 5, 8:15 p.m. in the Alumni Auditorium of the Hall Building. Oscar Peterson world-renowned jazz virtuoso and Abbé Maurice Proulx, pioneer of Quebec documentary films will be awarded honorary doctorates at that time. Clips of some of Proulx's films of famous Canadians who have received honorary university degrees will highlight the Fine Arts convocation.

At the Faculty of Engineering convocation, 8:15 p.m., June 6, in the Alumni Auditorium of the Hall Building, two Canadians who have made outstanding contributions to engineering will receive honorary doctorates. They are Donald C. MacPhail, director of the National Research Council's Division of Mechanical Engineering and past president of the Canadian Aeronautics and Space Institute, and Camille Dagenais, chief executive officer and chairman of the board of the Engineering firm Surveyer, Nenniger and Chênevert. Dagenais will deliver a short address to the assembled gathering.

The number of students graduating from Concordia this year is only 48 fewer than last year. The Faculty of Arts and Science produced the highest number of graduates with 1,198. The Faculty of Commerce and Administration came second with 641. The Faculty of Engineering accounts for 217 graduates and the Faculty of Fine Arts for 200. BS

Concordia scores first with art index

What do the following titles have in common: Son of Temperance and Canadian Gem, Bric a Brac, Rose Balford's Canadian Monthly and National Review, The Magic Lantern, The Colonial Pearl, The Mayflower or Lady's Acadian Newspaper and The Beehive?

The answer to this question is that they are 19th century periodicals containing articles about Canadian art and architecture, and are indexed in the forthcoming Concordia University Art Index to Nineteenth Century Canadian Periodicals.

The index is the first book of its kind and is the result of seven years of painstaking research by fine arts professor Hardy George and his graduate students Janice Seline, Kathy Kellar and Susan Findell. The book contains over 20,000 entries, and, says George, "will make a definite contribution as a source and reference book to students of 19th century art."

George first became interested in the subject while teaching a graduate class. He noticed the lack of resource material available to his students by their repeated use of the same sources. Unlike European and American art, there was no reference book for sources in 19th century Canadian art.

"Before the index, finding out about 19th century subjects usually meant a random and laborious search through titles of periodicals which often gave no indication of their content."

All this will change with the index. Already, he reports, even in its uncompleted form, students have been using the index.

Although the first printing will be a limited edition of 1000 copies, it is sure to be a mainstay in any library. MS

Heat threatens Van Library Services

Given the damp, inclement weather Montreal has been experiencing lately, a tropical heat wave might seem like a welcome prospect. But, to officials of Loyola's Vanier Library, it could lead to the reduction or curtailment of some of the library's necessary services this summer.

In the event of excessive heat and humidity library staff will be reduced to a minimum, though it is hoped that all services can be maintained.

If the weather situation deteriorates, only circulation and reference services will be available to library users.

If the temperature climbs above the 30° Celsius mark or drops below 14° Celsius, it may be necessary to withdraw services altogether until the situation improves.

 will be reduced by a half hour and how the reduction is to be applied will be worked out flexibly by each department . . . People on the Loyola campus should take note that On Campus, the twice weekly events bulletin produced by the Information and Dean of Students offices, will not return next year due to budget and personnel cutbacks. However the events pages of The Thursday Report will still be available to these and other members of the university community . . . Academic vice-rector Russell Breen gave the closing address to the Quebec Federation of Home and School Associations on May 5. He commented on problems facing anglophone education, namely the declining population, the required competency in French, cultural identity and character development . . .

of UCCC Jim Whitelaw was "fundamentally unhappy with the use of the term 'specialization' for what is essentially two minors." But he made it clear that UCCC supports a compromise whereby students would register in the journalism major while also being members of the Science College. Students would graduate with a Major in Journalism, Science College option.

This idea, although never voted on, was not received with enthusiasm by either Dean Adley or Dean Maurice Cohen of Division III. Both reminded Senate that students in the specialization would take independent study credits over and above those taken by other Science College members.

"The independent study courses are designed to meet the special needs of journalism students," said Dean Adley.

Dean Cohen was not happy with the use of the term "Science College option", which implied that the college was offering a minor program.

History professor Bob Tittler felt that the program should be administered by the Journalism Department (Division I) instead of through the Science College (Division IV) but agreed with the use of the term "specialization" because "it would be unfair to students to give them less than a specialization for the amount of work involved". He also felt that journalism should be given priority in the program title, suggesting a BA Specialization in Journalism and Science. An amendment moved to this effect was passed.

Discussion on what to call the program continued following the Tittler amendment and this resulted in another amendment changing "specialization" to "major". But it didn't end the debate over what to do with the phrase "journalism and science", prompting divisional dean June Chaikelson to comment, "It's the first time I've heard an educator say that it doesn't matter what is in the program, but what it's called."

The proposal was defeated nine to eight, with two recorded abstentions.

Other Arts and Science curriculum changes included the creation of an MA in Political Science (Public Policy and Public Administration), a BA Specialization in Classical Studies, a BA Major in Creative Writing, a Certificate in Women's Studies, a BA Specialization in Philosophy, a BA Specialization in Sociology; the presentation of a set of combined (Loyola and Sir George) programs in Psychology; the presentation of revised curriculum proposals for Lonergan

University College; and the elimination of the BA Specialization in English and Drama, the BA Major in Drama and the BSc Minor in Psychology.

In Fine Arts, a BFA Major in Modern Dance was approved by Senate.

"The first step in the opening up of the Commerce faculty to the Arts and Science faculty" was how Commerce and Administration dean Pierre Simon described his faculty's proposal for a Certificate and a Minor in Marketing Research. The Minor and Certificate were both approved.

All curriculum changes, with the exception of Lonergan University College, take effect May 1, 1980.

In other Senate business, the report of the ad hoc Senate committee on multiple submissions of course papers presented its recommendations. According to committee representative and Commerce student Neil Finestone, multiple submission (handing in the same paper to more than one course) "is outside the classification of cheating or plagiarism" and thus a proposed set of regulations was presented.

Several senators found the penalty for "second offenders" too harsh and suggested that requirements of having "to take a further one, two or three six-credit course, in addition to the total number required for the program" be halved.

Psychology professor Jane Stewart remarked that "the essential misdemeanor is one of deception. There should be some opening statement of what is expected. For example, under normal circumstances, original work should be submitted."

Mr. Finestone promised that the ad hoc committee would look at Senate's recommendations during the summer and would present a revised set of regulations to Senate in the fall.

Presentations concerning the academic re-evaluation regulations were made by ombudsman Suzanne Belson and members of the Commerce faculty.

Ms. Belson asked for revisions that would give both students and faculty the explicit right to appear before the faculty appeal committee and would disallow "a member of the faculty in whose course the student is currently enrolled... (from being appointed) to carry out a re-evaluation or investigation."

"The fact that Commerce is on a three-credit base instead of a six-credit base creates time-lag problems," said Dean Simon of the current regulation that allows 21 days from the release of a grade for an application for re-evaluation.

Students visit Guatemala

A firsthand look at the Third World

By Beverley Smith

Canada pours billions of dollars of aid money annually into such Third World Countries as Guatemala, but is this aid helping or hindering the development of these nations? What are the alternatives for a healthier relationship between the "developed" world and underdeveloped areas?

These are some of the burning questions preoccupying not only foreign affairs specialists but a group of Concordia students who returned this week from a month-long visit to Guatemala.

The field trip was undertaken from April 28 to May 28, as part of a third-year seminar on International Aid and Development, by 10 Concordia students under the leadership of Professor Julio Tresierra. The students, from such varied backgrounds as sociology, political science, communication studies and community nursing, were interested in studying first-hand the repercussions of Canadian development projects on Guatemala, as part of their work in Third World studies.

Guatemala was chosen as a suitable model for analysis, not only because of the massive amounts of Canadian aid it receives, but also because Tresierra is highly familiar with the country. From 1974 to 1976 he had lived in Guatemala, working with development agencies and getting to know local officials. This background provided a useful basis for the pilot project which ended this week.

The trip was the culmination of a seminar Tresierra began in January in which students analysed the history, politics, economics and culture of Guatemala through reading and discussion. There were also interviews with officials from Canadian aid organizations and lectures by guest speakers familiar with Guatemala, and audio-visual presentations on the regions to be visited.

Documents collected by the students are being used to start a Third World Studies "library". The students' preliminary research formed the groundwork for their fact-finding mission.

Funding for the project, which totalled some $10,000, was obtained through personal contributions by the participating students and monies from the Loyola Development Office, the student association at Loyola and the rector's office.

What this means, says Tresierra, is that the students will now be in a better position to evaluate how development aid is affecting the countries receiving it, and what changes are needed to ensure that local people in the recipient countries receive the aid they deem necessary, not that determined by governments.

Tresierra's students plan to put together an audio-visual record of their extraordinary adventure in Guatemala, which will be used to inform their fellow Canadians about Canada's involvement in the Third World.

Tresierra also hopes this first pilot project will become an annual event, enabling Third World students to visit not only Latin America, but also eventually African or Asian countries.

He would also like to see agreements between Concordia and Guatemalan universities for ongoing exchanges of faculty and students.

Projects such as the Guatemalan project, says Tresierra, are not only vital for increasing students' political awareness of developmental issues. They could also lead, he says, to the eventual establishment at Concordia of a program with a major in Third World studies and an eventual interuniversity college for international relations linking Concordia, McGill, UQAM (Université du Québec à Montréal), and the Université de Montréal.

Canada has a large part to play in international development, says Tresierra.

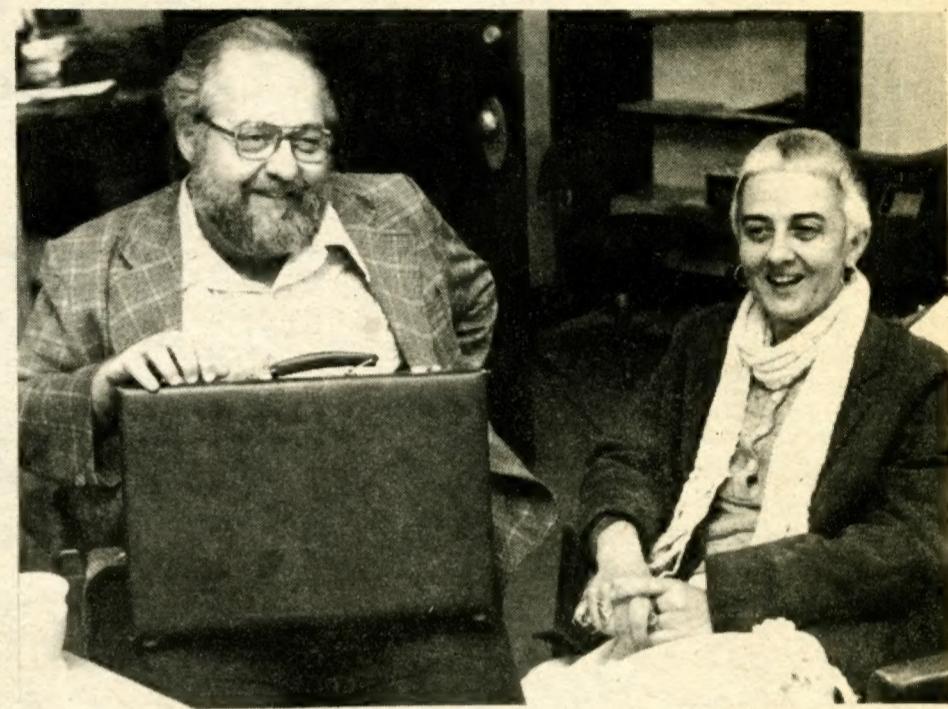

"We must provide assistance to this type of project in order to bring Canadians information about the Third World."

"We must sensitize agencies to developing projects that reflect the local people's needs, rather than the needs of local governments—if necessary bypassing governments altogether and working with non-government organizations."

"As long as our governments," says Tresierra, "continue to help the governments of Third World countries, they're not helping the people in those countries."

"We have to go to the media," he says, "and increase Canadians' social consciousness of the issues. The whole future of our relationship with Latin America depends on that."

In preparation for the field trip a number of local organizations in Guatemala were contacted, so that students could gain as comprehensive a view as possible of the various components of Guatemalan society. Arrangements were made to visit program sites of the OXFAM, CUSO and CARE agencies. Educational Sherman Friedland and dancer Elizabeth Langley will perform in "Sources III" in mid-June.

"Multi-media" concert combines dance, music

By Mark Gerson

Sources III may be an unusual name for a concert, but the mid-June recital featuring dancer Elizabeth Langley and clarinetist Sherman Friedland of Concordia, and percussionist Jan Williams of the State University of New York at Buffalo, can hardly be considered an ordinary concert.

"It's a totally unique concept," says Friedland, "and in a way it's a multi-media concert with dance, music, electronic music, tape, and fire."

"I don't think a clarinetist, a dancer and a percussionist have got together to perform before," adds Langley.

Perhaps one reason is that hardly anyone has written music for clarinet and percussion.

"It will be analogous to a teaching exchange," explains Friedland, "but it will be for performers, and will be open to students as well as faculty."

"If we can get this exchange going for students," says Langley, "they'll get more performance experience. It's also important that professors get out and perform, or else we just rot."

Sources III will run June 13, 14 and 15 at 8:30 p.m. in the Douglass Burns Clarke Theatre at Sir George. Tickets, which will be available only at the door, are $3 general admission, and $1 for students and senior citizens.

"It's all music from the twentieth century," explains Friedland. "Virtually everything is composed by unknown composers because there is very little repertoire for clarinet and percussion. Anything there is has been composed in the last ten years."

The contemporary nature of the concert is one of its most exciting features for Langley.

"Some dancers dance of the thirties and forties, but I always feel that I dance of the now. That's why I feel I can relate to the music of this concert."

Among the works to be performed in this "concert of solos, duos and trios" will be David Burge's Sources III, from which the recital takes its name, a trio for clarinet, percussion and dancer by Michael Sahl; Morton Feldman's King of Denmark for percussion; Wilson Osborne's Rhapsody and Edward Diamante's tribute to Billie Holiday, Lady Day, a trio for clarinet featuring Sherman Friedland live and on tape.

According to Langley, one of the benefits of the performance will be to make her and the musicians more aware of the other's art form.

"I intend to become a third instrument," she says. "I expect there to be a transference; for me to become a little more of a musician, and for the musicians to become more like dancers."

"The musicians will have to become more sensitive about their visual image. The visual is as important as the sound. It's all part of theatre."

Both Friedland and Langley hope this concert will be the beginning of a series of inter-university exchanges for music faculty and students and expect to join Jan Williams in Buffalo in the fall for a repeat performance.

Montreal Review

Spring - Summer 1979

Two Dollars

Profs collaborate on new review

By Michael Sotiron

The first issue of a new magazine focussing on Montreal has just appeared on the newsstands. Appropriately named The Montreal Review, the magazine features articles by two Concordia political science professors Andrew Gollner and Blair Williams.

Gollner an assistant editor, has contributed a critique of the new Canadian school of political economy, while Williams has written an article on the Pépin-Robarts Commission.

The review, a quarterly in a Maclean's-size format, is the brainchild of two Montreal-area CEGEP professors, Bryan Campbell and Bill Tierney. For them, the election of the Parti-Québécois government changed the rules of the Canadian national policy game, and made it especially important for the anglophone community of Quebec to reassess its position within Montreal and Quebec.

"We feared," Campbell notes, "that the English would withdraw and hide from the French community and turn inward." The English community needed to think about itself and stake out its position.

This was the role of the English-language dailies, the traditional spokesmen for the community, but, says Campbell, The Gazette and The Star have not done that job.

"The dailies do not serve us well," Campbell says. "There may be the further problem that as members of newspaper chains whose commitments are determined elsewhere, they cannot. After the dailies, there are no vehicles of commentary originating in Montreal which deal specifically with the problems of les anglophones."

Moreover, Ottawa cannot provide leadership either, Campbell argues, since increasingly it is preoccupied with Toronto and the West.

There was no other solution left to the English community, but to create its own vehicle, which addresses itself specifically to the problems of that community. Thus, The Montreal Review was born.

In its statement of purpose, written by Campbell and Tierney, the Review announces that the current challenge of the PQ and the forthcoming referendum should not be greeted with "hysteria", but with "reflection".

"Only then can it be turned to advantage. The Montreal Review is meant to be a vehicle for reflection and exchange. We will initiate a political discussion and provide a forum for further debate. We will review books. We will review Montreal cultural life. We will publish new creative work: stories, plays, poems. We will return to the neighbourhoods and to the "quartiers", and report on life in Montreal. We will report on The Gazette and The Star. We will be reviewing conferences. We will be in the cafés. Montreal is our domain. Our motivation is to respond intelligently organizations such as the University of San Carlos and the University of Landivar were contacted. Research and banking organizations, peasant unions, agricultural co-operatives and workers' groups were all persuaded to meet with the students. Arrangements were made for housing and feeding them in dormitories, hotels, pensions, and co-operative or community centres.

The field trip took students from the small farms of the Indian population to huge coffee and cotton plantations of Guatemala's elite, from rural university extension outposts in the highlands to sophisticated urban centres, from areas of extreme affluence to those of dire poverty.

The language problem was bridged through use of a bilingual guide, since only two of the students participating in the project were fluent in Spanish.

While in Guatemala the students were shocked into discovering the negative and hidden underbelly of international development.

The rector of one of Guatemala's leading universities was running for his life, after receiving death threats from right-wing terrorists. In the month during which the students were in Guatemala, two university professors who would have been useful contacts for the students were killed, and a number of union and peasant leaders were also assassinated.

Government-affiliated development organizations were less than cooperative about taking students to some of the sites they'd planned to visit, whereas workers went out of their way volunteering their energy and time to arrange transportation to difficult areas.

"It was an incredible experience for the students," says Tresierra. "They're still under culture shock. Everything that was presented theoretically to them started falling into place. Now they can see the links between North American consumer society, international development and aid never reaching the people it's destined for."

He explained that the changes proposed by and for the Commerce faculty would reduce the grace period to seven days from the posting of the grade. This would allow the evaluation to take place in time for the student to register in a second-term course for which the first-term course was a prerequisite.

"The problem," continued Simon, "is how a great number of students can register for a course while they are still under appeal for its prerequisite."

Ken Adams expressed concern that the "seven days" would begin with the posting of the grades, not with their official release. He added that his office couldn't always guarantee the "same-day posting" of grades that was in effect this year.

Dean Chaikelson suggested that the benefits of applying within seven days be explained in the calendar, but that the 21-day period apply should the first deadline be missed.

Professor Stewart remarked that, as the problem wasn't necessarily restricted to Commerce courses, some addition to the regulations might be made stating that an appeal for a prerequisite course must be filed within seven days if the subsequent course is to be taken in the succeeding term.

The consensus of Senate was that the Commerce revisions should be integrated into the university-wide regulations and Rector John O'Brien suggested that a committee be formed to look at the revisions proposed by Suzanne Belson and Dean Simon.

Senate next meets in regular session in September 1979.

Salon de la femme salutes Verthuy

Mair Verthuy, principal of Concordia's Simone de Beauvoir Institute, was among ten Quebec women singled out this year by Montreal's Salon de la femme for their extraordinary contributions to the status of women in the province.

Verthuy received her award, in the form of an honorary scroll, at the ceremonies marking the Salon's 10th anniversary, in the Olympic Velodrome, Friday May 4th, before a crowd of spectators from various parts of Quebec.

The ceremonies were hosted by Nicole Germain, president of the Salon de la femme, and were co-sponsored by radio station CKAC.

Verthuy was honoured specifically for her devotion and perseverance to the betterment of women in the field of education. As principal of the Simone de Beauvoir Institute and one of its founding members, she has been instrumental in setting up courses of particular interest to women or about women at Concordia.

Awards in other categories included: Denise Laine, social work; Yvonne Morissette, volunteer work; Gabrielle Vallée, legal aid; Francine Montpetit, journalism; Simone Lamontagne, recreation; Gloria Jeliu, health; and Madeleine Parent, union activities.

Special awards were also given to Solange Chaput-Rolland for her work in the political arena, especially with the Pépin-Robarts Commission, and to Françoise Godet-Smet, for her contributions to the women of Quebec in the field of public speaking. BS

Concordia's Senior Scholarship program, inaugurated a year ago, has proven so successful that it's being repeated this year.

The program provides five scholarships of $500 to students over 60 years of age, on the basis of academic potential and/or "life experience".

The scholarships are awarded for one academic year and are renewable for a maximum of four years. They are available to any student entering or already enrolled in a graduate or 90-credit undergraduate program.

Students wishing to enter at the undergraduate level must have a CEGEP diploma or its equivalent and must be prepared to take at least 18 credits (six one-semester courses) per academic year to be eligible for a
